"The secret to marketing is to connect emotionally. Every word, image, act. Emotion is the siracha of the internet"

USER PERSONA

NAME Marcus Vance

AGE 34 GENDER Male LOCATION Austin, Texas

JOB Boutique Retail Brand INCOME $85,000 – $110,000

BACKGROUND

Short bio:

Alex is a tech-savvy 2nd-year college student balancing a heavy course load with personal projects and casual gaming. While naturally curious and capable, Alex quickly loses focus when presented with wall-of-text slides, monotonous multiple-choice forms, or conventional LMS quizzes. Alex thrives on interactive learning, visual storytelling, and quick feedback loops, preferring gamified experiences that turn study sessions into engaging challenges rather than tedious tasks.

Lifestyle:

Alex is a digitally immersed college student who constantly multi-tasks between academic portals, Discord, and indie retro games throughout the day. Rather than engaging in long cramming sessions, Alex relies on quick, late-night micro-learning bursts to absorb information efficiently. Having grown up with responsive software, Alex expects fast, visual, and seamlessly interactive digital experiences in both study and play.

Frustration:

Alex's primary struggle in academic settings stems from rigid, uninspiring digital tools that make learning feel entirely passive. Standardized online forms, plain-text quizzes, and traditional LMS platforms generate immediate fatigue because they treat knowledge testing like dry administrative paperwork rather than an engaging experience.